FreeShippingOn will locate free shipping offers

by Brian Osborne posted on February 29, 2008 3:25 pm

Okay, so if you've been a Geek.com reader for a while now you know I am a fan of free services and products. Well, a new website will be launching on Monday which will help you get even more stuff free. Specifically, the website will allow you to search for free shipping deals on Amazon, eBay, and at over 500 other stores. The website is being launched by the same creators of DealLocker.com, the Secret Amazon Discount Tool, and TypoBuddy.com.

Freeshippingon.com will provide a search box to locate items on Amazon and eBay that offer free shipping. Another tab lists a number of other stores that allow you to take advantage of free shipping deals by clicking on the corresponding store logo.

Shipping is the one thing that sometimes make items online more expensive. You eliminate the shipping and you get a great deal. If the item is already cheaper online even with shipping, then why not make that good deal a great deal by eliminating shipping? This is yet another convenient website consumers can use to save a few more bucks when it comes to shopping online.

Be sure to check out the Freeshippingon.com website, beginning Monday, March 3.

I used deallocker the other day to save money at snapfish. I found two different coupons that when used on two separate orders saved me about $80. Coupon sites have been out for a while now but deallocker is really easy to use. i would imagine that their latest venture will be just as easy.
